Conclusion

In conclusion, addressing gender data needs for national development priorities and the 2030 Agenda in Fiji requires concerted efforts to overcome the challenges faced. Improving data availability, quality, and disaggregation, strengthening institutional capacity, enhancing coordination and collaboration, and promoting data accessibility and utilization are crucial steps towards achieving gender equality and sustainable development. By leveraging cross-country knowledge exchange and learning from best practices, Fiji can enhance its gender data systems and contribute to global efforts towards gender equality and the SDGs. By prioritizing gender data and investing in comprehensive and reliable data collection, Fiji can foster evidence-based decision-making, monitor progress, and implement targeted interventions to address gender disparities and promote inclusive development.
