Regarding the regional cooperation, I would like to add one issue which connects all issues of population and development, which is the care workforce migration. With the population ageing, the long-term care needs increase. We cannot always depend on the unpaid work of women, and the skilled care personnel is lacking. Facing this situation, we support the Asia Health and Wellbeing Initiative (AHWIN), conducted by ERIA (Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia), in which, circular migration for care personnel is promoted to benefit both sending and receiving countries, through the proper training system and dissemination of appropriate care protocols and technologies and equipments such as robots and IT application. Through this initiative, it is hoped that the elderly care system will be developed in the region.
